that it was a hardship that appeals against the decisions of the Registering officers were not provided for under the new Settlement scheme. The provision made for revising the decisions had not, he said, met the requirements of the situation. The exercise of the power of revision was not compulsory, but was confined to the rectification of errors when detected; and in the hurry of completing their programme of work, the superior officers could not find time to attend to that portion of their duties. Patta, it was said, did not confer title to land. Great value, however, was being attached to it in the Courts and the real owner of a land could not therefore be indifferent to the issue of his patta. He further said that hasty and perfunctory disposal of registration cases meant a rush of suits in the Civil courts and before a landowner could be asked to resort to them, he should have exhausted the remedies of appeal to the higher officers in the Department itself. He therefore urged that appeals from the decisions of the Supervisors should be provided for.

Dewan's reply.—You are under a wrong impression if you think that the sole object of Government is to expedite the Settlement operations under any circumstances. The object of Government in passing the recent Proceedings was solely to benefit the people. The care of Government also is that pattas should be issued to the right persons. If the people think that the system of appeals from the Supervisor to the Assistant Peishkar and from him to the Dewan Peishkar and finally to the Dewan should be revived, Government would be glad to change the rules and restore the old practice. I would advise you to think over the matter and have a meeting of the representatives convened, and if the sense of the meeting be that the rules should be changed, Government would be quite prepared to meet the wishes of the people. It is necessary to bear in mind that the early completion of the Settlement is not in the interests of Government alone.
